

Being Christian at College

Being a Christian in higher education isn't always easy, especially if you're far from home and your family! Keep in touch with your JGMC family (it's easy - we're on Facebook and email!) and find yourself a Church home wherever you are studying. Also be on the lookout for Christian Unions or other groups of like-minded students who can offer fellowship, support and inspiration, or just a safe place to hang out. And don't underestimate the importance of like-minded groups, be they sports or arts or hobbies, even if they aren't "Christian" groups. It's easier to make friends in a new place if you already have something in common.

Here are some other resources:

Transitioning to College A site from the Christian Unions aimed at students who are (or are about to become) freshers/freshmen at university. Lots of advice in text and video.

The Hardest Part Video interviews with college students on the hardest part about being a Christian at university.

Bethinking.org Designed for those "wanting to dig deeper into the evidence for Christianity" or "seeking convincing answers to the difficult questions about God, life and everything."

Friends International This is a group designed to provide Christian fellowship and general help in settling in for international students in the UK.

Being a Christian Student Today A PDF article with some general thoughts about being a Christian, and perhaps part of a Christian group, on campus.

International Fellowship of Evangelical Students Students reaching students with the Gospel. Main site has pages for different geographical regions.

College View A general interest site with advice for students, including advice on choosing colleges, majors and careers, as well as campus life.

Relevant Magazine God. Life. Progressive Culture. A range of thoughtful articles on all sorts of topics, including sizeable sections for both undergraduates and post-graduates.

Boundless Magazine for people who are in college or starting their career, mainly for single people.

The Phantom Tollbooth Pop culture (reviews of movies, music, books and concerts) from a Christian perspective.
